Notes for Authors

Manuscripts (as WORD attachments) should be sent to: d.bourn@ioe.ac.uk

Articles should be original. Should any material overlap with material which the author has published elsewhere in another language other than English, this should be made clear when the article is submitted. All articles will be refereed by members of the editorial board and other internationally renowned academics, which may lead to suggestions for the improvement of the article. The author's final draft will be edited and corrected by the journal's final editor.

Main articles should be between 3,000 and 8,000 words, including abstracts and referencing. An abstract of 80-120 words in English should be provided at the beginning of the article. It is recommended that an outline of a proposed article is sent in advance of submitting the article.

Authors should prepare and send two versions of their manuscript. One should be a complete text, including author details and short professional biographies of each author, while in the second all document information identifying the author should be removed from files to allow them to be sent anonymously to referees.

Book review queries should be addressed to: A.D.Morgan@exeter.ac.uk

Tables and captions to illustrations. Tables and captions to illustrations must be typed out on separate sheets and not included as part of the text. The captions to illustrations should be gathered together and also typed out on a separate sheet. Tables and figures should be numbered in Arabic numerals. The approximate position of tables and figures should be indicated in the manuscript. Captions should include keys to symbols.

Figures. Please supply one set of artwork in a finished form suitable for reproduction. Figures will not normally be withdrawn by the Publisher.

Reference style and format. A full explanation of the style and referencing for the articles is available on www.trentham-books.co.uk

References should be indicated in the typescript by giving the author's name, with the year of publication in parenthesis. If several papers by the same author and from the same year are cited, a, b, c, etc. should be put after the year of publication. The references should be listed in full, including pages, at the end of the paper in the following standard forms:

For books:
Gaine, C (2006) We’re All White Thanks: the persisting myth about white schools. Stoke on Trent: Trentham

For articles:

For chapters

For online

End notes should be kept to a minimum. They should be numbered consecutively throughout the article, and should immediately precede the ‘References’ section.

Early Electronic Offprints: Corresponding authors can now receive their article by e-mail as a complete PDF. This allows the author to print up to 50 copies, free of charge, and disseminate them to colleagues. In many cases this facility will be available up to two weeks prior to publication, or alternatively a copy of the journal will be sent by post to all corresponding authors after publication.

Copyright. It is a condition of publication that authors assign copyright or license the publication rights in their articles, including abstracts, to Trentham Books Limited. This enables us to ensure full copyright protection and to disseminate the article to the widest possible readership in print and electronic formats as appropriate. Authors are themselves responsible for obtaining permission to reproduce copyright material from other sources.

This sixth issue draws together three articles exploring some of the key debates in the field of development education and global learning. The articles look at global citizenship education, development education and global learning, through empirical research and insider insight. They address potentials and constraints in relation to the nature of knowledge, processes of learning, pedagogic challenges, conceptual complexities and possibilities for change. All offer unique insights, but draw on themes and debates evident in previous issues of the journal.

The paper by Vanessa Andreotti, David Jefferess, Karen Pashby, Cash Rowe, Paul Tarc and Lisa Taylor asks the six authors how conflict and difference is conceptualized in global citizenship education (GCE) imaginaries in Canada. The responses are presented as five separate dialogues, highlighting a range of situated perspectives on working with difference in the authors’ contexts of teaching and research on GCE in higher education. Framing the debate is a discussion on how GCE is conceptualised within Canada and how in certain circumstances it can reaffirm Canadian values and attitudes to the rest of the world. The paper highlights critiques of this privileging of Western knowledge and suggests a need for more complex and nuanced perspectives to be included within conceptualisations and practices of GCE in higher education. This paper is the first in a series of papers in the journal to look at GCE. It offers the readers an interesting insight into some of the complexities and challenges for researchers/practioners working in the field.

Catharine Chaput, Michael O’Sullivan and Christine Arnold’s article explores the potential for transformative learning through a short term study abroad course for visiting Canadian students in Cuba. In this context, transformative learning is defined as a deep, structural shift in basic premises of thought, feelings and actions which dramatically alters our way of being in the world. The two-week course explores global issues from the perspective of local (Cuban) inhabitants and includes a series of lectures on politics, history and culture, as well as visits to sites of interest. The article maps the experiences of two sets of university students and the extent to which transformative learning had taken place. In particular the authors ask whether transformative learning experiences can be achieved where liberal and neoliberal ideologies have a strong hold on student thinking. Indeed, they argue that the use of liberal discourse reduced the transformative potential of the students’ global education experiences. The authors argue that long term engagement with a critical mass of educators who can challenge students’ neoliberal perspectives and enable students to consider alternative worldviews may be a more effective way of achieving transformation. This paper builds on a body of work previously published (see Davies and Lam, 2 (2)) in the journal about the learning experiences of students on and potential of short term study abroad programmes.

Neda Forghani-Arani and Helmuth Hartmeyer’s paper explores the development of a national strategy for global learning in Austria. As insiders in the process of strategy development, the authors firstly map the development of the strategy, highlight its conceptual underpinnings and indicate how the strategy can be implemented. The authors then look at how the development of strategy on global learning can affect programmatic, policy and institutional change, and how through engaging with the strategy itself, the conceptual framework can alter. This article is one of an ongoing series of articles in the journal reviewing the nature of global learning in various countries (see Nygaard, 2 (1)). As such it brings us up to date with changes and developments in the global learning debate in Austria.

The journal was established to provide a platform for empirical research and to encourage theoretical debate in the field of development education and global learning. The articles in this issue have contributed to these aims, offering insight into the complexities of development education and global learning at a conceptual and theoretical level, but also in terms of teaching and learning practices. They draw on ideas and debates which will be explored further through future issues of the journal.
