Notes for Authors

Manuscripts (as WORD attachments) should be sent to: d.bourn@ioe.ac.uk

Articles should be original. Should any material overlap with material which the author has published elsewhere in another language other than English, this should be made clear when the article is submitted. All articles will be refereed by members of the editorial board and other internationally renowned academics, which may lead to suggestions for the improvement of the article. The author's final draft will be edited and corrected by the journal's final editor.

Main articles should be between 3,000 and 8,000 words, including abstracts and referencing. An abstract of 80-120 words in English should be provided at the beginning of the article. It is recommended that an outline of a proposed article is sent in advance of submitting the article.

Authors should prepare and send two versions of their manuscript. One should be a complete text, including author details and short professional biographies of each author, while in the second all document information identifying the author should be removed from files to allow them to be sent anonymously to referees.

Book review queries should be addressed to: d.bourn@ioe.ac.uk

Tables and captions to illustrations. Tables and captions to illustrations must be typed out on separate sheets and not included as part of the text. The captions to illustrations should be gathered together and also typed out on a separate sheet. Tables and figures should be numbered in Arabic numerals. The approximate position of tables and figures should be indicated in the manuscript. Captions should include keys to symbols.

Figures. Please supply one set of artwork in a finished form suitable for reproduction. Figures will not normally be withdrawn by the Publisher.

Reference style and format. A full explanation of the style and referencing for the articles is available on www.trentham-books.co.uk

References should be indicated in the typescript by giving the author's name, with the year of publication in parenthesis. If several papers by the same author and from the same year are cited, a, b, c, etc. should be put after the year of publication. The references should be listed in full, including pages, at the end of the paper in the following standard forms:

For books:
Gaine, C (2006) We're All White Thanks: the persisting myth about white schools. Stoke on Trent: Trentham

For articles:

For chapters

For online

End notes should be kept to a minimum. They should be numbered consecutively throughout the article, and should immediately precede the ‘References’ section.

Early Electronic Offprints: Corresponding authors can now receive their article by e-mail as a complete PDF. This allows the author to print up to 50 copies, free of charge, and disseminate them to colleagues. In many cases this facility will be available up to two weeks prior to publication, or alternatively a copy of the journal will be sent by post to all corresponding authors after publication.

Copyright. It is a condition of publication that authors assign copyright or license the publication rights in their articles, including abstracts, to Trentham Books Limited. This enables us to ensure full copyright protection and to disseminate the article to the widest possible readership in print and electronic formats as appropriate. Authors are themselves responsible for obtaining permission to reproduce copyright material from other sources.

This is the tenth issue of the International Journal of Development Education and Global Learning. The Journal was established in 2008 with the aim of acting as the focus for research and debate on development education and global learning from around the world. We have been very pleased with the progress we have made with the Journal to date with three issues per year and aiming to cover both more theoretically reflective articles as well as material that summarises existing research. We have also been pleased with the diversity of material that we have submitted both in terms of themes, range of authors and countries from which they come. To date of the nearly 30 articles published in the Journal, authors have come from 15 countries. If we have any disappointments to date they are the small number of articles published from African based authors. We are also keen to secure more articles based on recently completed empirical research.

This issue highlights some of the themes and trends we have addressed to date concerning relationship between development education and broader policy goals and objectives, the continuing influence of postcolonial theory within the areas of concern of the Journal and specific evidence of the impact of learning about global issues within formal education.

The first article by David Hudson and Jennifer vanHeerde Hudson from University College in London tackle the debates around understanding and engagement in international development and global poverty through an analysis of recent public attitude surveys. Their article raises important questions for both researchers and policy-makers about how these public views are measured. A key point they address is the perceived lack of understanding as to what motivates support for development aid. They also suggest that perhaps surveys and reviews of attitudes should in future look much more at the complexity and diversity of public viewpoints rather than ‘the public’.

The second article by Steven Camicia from Utah State University is based on a combination of influences from queer theory and postcolonial theory as a framework for analysing curriculum frameworks for teacher education in Unites States and the Philippines. He raises the importance of creating a ‘third space’ for dialogue and debate for teachers. This re-inforces themes raised in previous issues of the Journal regarding the challenges learning and reflection about global issues has on the individual educator.
Finally the article from Ireland by Rowan Oberman, Fionnuala Waldron and Sheila Dillon outlines the development of a global citizenship education programme for three to six year olds. The programme, entitled Just Children, was created by Education for a Just World, a partnership between an Irish Development Non-Governmental Organisation, Trécaire, and the Centre for Human Rights and Citizenship Education located in St Patrick’s College, Drumcondra, Dublin. The programme was developed through three phases of research. The first phase examined young children’s engagement with global justice issues; the second phase explored possible strategies for including global citizenship education in early childhood educational settings and the third phase tested a drafted global citizenship education programme. This article explores the key principles integral to educating for and about global justice and, responding to the results of research, as well as the early childhood education landscape, arrives at strategies for introducing global justice work into early childhood settings. This article raises important questions and debates regarding ways in which introducing a global perspective into early childhood education can be undertaken including differing methodologies and approaches based on active and open-ended learning styles.

All of these articles in different ways continue to show both the theoretical and empirical research value of development education and global learning to broader debates within education and development. At a time when many countries are questioning both their commitment to aid and development and also the relevance of learning about global issues within education, these articles continue to show the need for more research, greater theoretical clarity and above all evidence as to the importance of development education and global learning.
