NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Monish Bhatia is a lecturer in criminology at Birkbeck, University of London. He has published widely in journals and books, and his article “The Permission to Be Cruel: Street Level Bureaucrats and Harms against People Seeking Asylum” (Critical Criminology 2020) won the Hate Crime Network Award (part of the British Criminology Society). Monish is the co-editor of several books and special issues of journals including Stealing Time: Migration, Temporalities and State Violence (Palgrave 2021), “Migration, Vulnerability and Violence” (International Journal for Crime, Justice and Social Democracy 2020), “Race, Mental Health and State Violence” (Race & Class January 2021) and this special issue on “Migration and Racist State Violence” (State Crime 2022).

Hanno Brankamp is a departmental lecturer in Forced Migration at the Refugee Studies Centre, University of Oxford, UK. His research focuses primarily on humanitarianism, forced migration, camps and carceral geographies, abolitionism, and the politics of (im)mobility in Africa and beyond.

Jon Burnett is a lecturer in Criminology at Swansea University. He has written extensively on criminalization, punishment, political economy and carcerality and is the author of Work and the Carceral State (Pluto Press 2022). He is the co-editor of the journal Justice, Power and Resistance.

DOI:10.13169/statecrime.11.1.0164
Sofia José Santos is an Assistant Professor in International Relations at the Faculty of Economics, University of Coimbra, and a researcher at the Center for Social Studies (CES), where she coordinates the DeCodeM project as a Principal Investigator. Since 2008 she has developed research on media and global interventionism; media and securitization processes; media and foreign policy; internet and technopolitics; and media and masculinities. Within CES, she is also co-editor of Alice News. She holds a PhD and an MA in International Politics and Conflict Resolution from the Faculty of Economics of the University of Coimbra, a degree in International Relations from the same university, and a Diploma in Advanced Studies in Communication Sciences from ISCTE-IUL. Previously, she was an Invited Assistant Professor in International Relations at the Faculty of Economics of the University of Coimbra (2016–2019), a postdoctoral researcher at OBSERVARE / UAL (2015/2016) and CES (2015), and researcher and coordinator of media and communication in Promundo-Europa (2014–2015). She was also a visiting scholar at the Flemish Peace Institute and a Marie Curie fellow at the Universiteit Utrecht. In addition to publications, conferences and national and international research projects, it is also worth mentioning her work in co-coordinating and co-editing the P@x Bulletin of the NHUMEP Peace Studies Group, her involvement in international networks, social movements, and the several research works she has undertaken for international think tanks and development agencies such as NOREF, UKAID, Palladium, and Promundo-US. Her current research interests focus on media representations and securitization; media and foreign policy; media, masculinities and violence prevention; digital rights and contentious politics; and critical internet studies.

Barak Kalir is an anthropologist based at the University of Amsterdam. He is the co-director of the Institute for Migration and Ethnic Studies and is currently involved in the H2020 ADMIGOV project: Advancing Alternative Migration Governance. Barak has recently rounded off an ERC-funded project entitled: The Social Life of State Deportation Regimes, where together with a team of researchers he ethnographically documented and analysed the views, motivations and practices of state bureaucrats and civil-society actors directly involved in deportation of illegalized migrants in several countries around the world. Among his recent publications are: “Departheid: The Draconian Governance of Illegalized Migrants in Western States” (Conflict and Society 2019), “Repressive Compassion: Deportation Caseworkers Furnishing an Emotional Comfort Zone in Encounters with Illegalized Migrants” (PoLAR: Political and Legal Anthropology Review 2019), and two co-edited special issues: “Nonrecording States: Between Legibility and Looking Away” (Focaal: Journal of Global and Historical Anthropology 2017) and “Re-Searching Access: What Do Attempts at Studying Migration Control Tell Us about the State?” (Social Anthropology 2019).
Lena Karamanidou is an independent researcher. Her research focuses on the European border regime, the EU agency Frontex, and border violence, pushback practices and infrastructures at the Greek–Turkish land border. She previously worked for the EU-funded project RESPOND: Multi-level Governance of Mass Migration in Europe and Beyond. Recent publications include “From Exceptional Threats to Normalized Risks: Border Controls in the Schengen Area and the Governance of Secondary Movements of Migration” (Journal of Borderlands Studies 2020) and “A Welcome for 8 Months: Europe, the Summer of Migration and Global Justice” in an edited collection, Migration and the Contested Politics of Justice (Routledge 2021) (both with B. Kasparek). She holds a PhD in Sociology from City, University of London.

Bernd Kasparek is a cultural anthropologist working in the interdisciplinary field of critical migration and border regime studies. His research interests are the Europeanization of migration and border policies, racism, and digital infrastructures. In 2021, his book Europa als Grenze: Eine Ethnographie der Grenzschutz-Agentur Frontex [Europe as Border: An Ethnography of the Border Agency Frontex] was published by transcript. He collaborated with Lena Karamanidou in the Horizon2020 funded project Respond. Multi-level Governance of Mass Migration to Europe and Beyond. Bernd is a founding member of kritnet, the “Network for Critical Border and Migration Regime Research,” a member of the editorial board of the journal movements, and a member of the board of the activist research association bordermonitoring.eu e.V.

Ronit Lentin is a retired Associate Professor of Sociology (Trinity College Dublin). Her latest books include: Traces of Racial Exception: Racializing Israeli Settler Colonialism (Bloomsbury 2018), Enforcing Silence: Academic Freedom, Palestine and the Criticism of Israel (with D. Landy and C. McCarthy, Zed Books 2020), Disavowing Asylum: Documenting Ireland’s Asylum Industrial Complex (with Vukašin Nedeljković, Rowman & Littlefield 2021), and Racism and Antiracism in Ireland (ebook with Robbie McVeigh, 2021).

Rienner Publishers 2006) and a career’s worth of articles and chapters on crimes by corporations and governments, environmental crime, immigration and bordering practices, criminological theory, and public health crimes.

Anne Mulhall is an associate professor in the School of English, Drama, Film and Creative Writing at University College Dublin, where she teaches and researches in critical migration and border studies, gender, queer, and feminist cultural criticism and theory, and contemporary Irish writing and culture. She co-directs the UCD Centre for Gender, Feminisms and Sexualities with Aideen Quilty, and coordinates the MA in Gender, Sexuality and Culture. She has published many articles and essays on a diverse range of subjects, the common thread being her interest in what is happening in the current social, political, and cultural moment.

Maayan Ravid is conducting postdoctoral research at Bar Ilan University on urban responses to African asylum seekers in Tel Aviv during the COVID-19 pandemic. Maayan completed her PhD in Criminology at the University of Oxford where she studied the detention of African asylum seekers in Israel’s Holot detention facility between 2013 and 2018, and its wide-ranging effects on detained asylum seekers and Israeli residents in South Tel Aviv. She obtained her BA in Political Science and Histories of Africa from Tel Aviv University, and a Master’s in Socio-Legal Research from Oxford’s Centre for Socio-Legal Studies. Maayan’s academic studies correspond with long-term activism alongside asylum-seeking communities from Sudan and Eritrea in Israel.

Olga Solovova, MA in Descriptive Linguistics (Sociolinguistics and Sociology of Language, 2007), PhD in Modern Languages and Literatures (Sociolinguistics, 2014) by the University of Coimbra, Portugal. Solovova is currently a Science Manager at the Centre for Interdisciplinary Studies and a Researcher integrated in the group on Digital Humanities at the same research centre. She is also a collaborating researcher at the Centre for Social Studies within the Humanities, Migrations and Peace Studies research group (both at the University of Coimbra, Portugal). Solovova received the Maria Sklodowska-Curie Action research fellowship to develop her post-doctoral research in multilingualism in borderlands at the Centre for Multilingualism in Society across the Lifespan (MultiLing) at the University of Oslo, Norway (2018–2020). Back in Portugal and drawing from her research interests in life trajectories, language ideologies and policies, visual discourses, linguistic citizenship, and construction of linguistic/cultural identity in multilingual societies, Solovova continues to pursue an interdisciplinary path in linguistic research in dialogue with sociology, information science, STS, education and anthropology.
Corina Tulbure studies internal borders in Spain, and forms of violence, racism, and political action among illegalized people. She also worked as a collaborative researcher in a project with the University of Oslo and as a journalist for the Spanish media, covering stories of migration and political processes in different states from Eastern Europe. She holds a PhD from the University of Barcelona.

Ellen Van Damme (PhD) is a Fulbright post-doctoral researcher at the Center for the Study of International Migration (CSIM), University of California Los Angeles (UCLA), where she studies female migration from the Honduran countryside to the US. Her research is qualitative in nature, and focuses on multicausal factors of migration, with a particular focus on climate change as a push factor. She holds a PhD in Criminology from the University of Leuven (KU Leuven), whereby she studied women and gangs in Honduras.